Students, groups initiate campus recycling

By JEFF BRUNSON
News Editor

Three IPFW students have initiated a triad of involvements aimed at promoting recycling on campus. Anita Fink, Biology Club president, introduced her club's recycling drive over a year ago.

According to Fink, "I'm in a good position to turn ideas into action, and I felt that a good place to start would be recycling."

The Biology Club has collection barrels for recyclable materials in Kettler Hall and Medical Library, and they will soon place an additional barrel in the Classroom Medical Building.

The Biology Club also periodically offers individuals an opportunity to drop off accumulations of recyclable material. On the first Monday of each month, people may bring aluminum, computer paper and newspaper to Kettler Hall, which is open between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. From Kettler, the club hauls the materials to a local recycling company.

Fink said that at the end of the year, the club intends to donate the money made from the recycling drive to an environmental group. Fink strongly encourages people to seek preventative measures to environmental problems, rather than "having to react to full-blown problems such as contaminated water supplies and overflowing landfills." She added, "The best place to start is with yourself because you can't expect other people to do things that you yourself are not doing. Every little thing that a person does contributes to a bigger picture."

Student senator Melanie Lane raised the issue of recycling on campus at a Students' Government meeting in the beginning of the spring semester. Lane also contacted the Indiana Fiber Recycling Company and arranged a meeting between one of their representatives, himself, Physical Plant director Don Ketter and IPFW director of purchasing, Paul Strauss. During the meeting, they discussed the need for facility center to propose where high amounts of recyclable waste paper are generated. They also discussed how IIFR's recycling program works, and how recyclable material would be separated from non-recyclable waste if IFR's program were implemented.

According to Lane, IPFW would like to use IFFW for a "Plant recycling project." Under their plan, IFW would provide IPFW with collection containers free of charge. IFW would place 96 gallon containers at various locations on campus, to collect different grades of paper.

IFR representative Denise McCully said that IPFW would be paid for computer wastepaper and newspaper collected from the school print shop, but would not be paid for lower grades of "mixed" paper collected in other locations on campus. Magazines, newspapers, food packages and washroom paper waste would not be accepted for collection. McCully adds that IPFW would not be charged a fee for IFR's collection service. "As volume increases in recycling, the waste disposal cost should decrease."

According to Don Ketter, the administration has made no definite decisions, as of yet, on whether to accept IFR's proposal, but he believes that a plan may be formulated in the near future. "Once we get into this," said Ketter, "we're going to need the cooperation of everyone that we can get involved in the separation and the materials that are recyclable and getting them into the containers." Regarding landfill waste disposal, Ketter added, "Someday we're going to be up to our belt buckle in waste if we don't start doing something different."

Frank Borelli, vice chancellor of student affairs, has also been working closely with Lane and other interested parties to get IFR's recycling plan implemented on campus. According to Borelli, "It (the recycling plan) looks pretty good so far."

Rie Johnson, a student consultant in the computer and data processing department, recently started an ad campaign to promote recycling. According to Johnson, "It occurred to me that if there were an ad campaign to raise the awareness of students in the computer center or on the entire campus, for that matter, they would be more apt to put their waste paper in the right place for recycling."

Johnson said that the idea for the message he developed, "Waste paper, Waste Earth," was inspired when he read about a student senate recycling proposal in the February 1 edition of The Communicator.

If all goes according to his plan, Johnson's campaign will soon be appearing whenever students log onto computers in the computer and data processing department—and possibly elsewhere on campus as well. In addition to the "log on" ad, Johnson said, "We are currently working on a graphic ad for Facilities, which will carry the same theme as the other ad. Naveh Nikpour (director of Channel 6) said that as soon as we get it done, they would run it. My goal is to get all students involved in recycling paper."

Earth Day activities planned for IPFW

By JEFF BRUNSON
News Editor

Plans are gearing up for Earth Day activities and events to be held at IPFW and various locations in the Fort Wayne area. Melanie Lane, student senator, and Janie Fink, president of the Biology Club, are organizing the Earth Day events that will be held on April 22 at IPFW.

According to Lane, tentative plans for Earth Day include both national and locally recognized speakers, and outdoor booths and displays sponsored by local groups concerned with the environment. The Earth Day activities will be centered around Walb Memorial Union and plan to include live musical performances and activities for Children such as games, puppet shows, and essay readings by children on "how to save the earth."

In addition to the April 22 Earth Day celebration, plans are being made to hold environmental events throughout the week of April 22 to April 28, in which Earth Day falls.

"Since this is the 20th anniversary of earth day," said co-organizer Fink, "I wanted to take off from that point and have an Earth Week. I planned a lecture series in which there will be several out-of-state speakers who will speak on environmental issues such as global warming, species extinction and ozone depletion." Fink adds that on currently planned, the speaker series will run two nights, followed by a free public movie, a concert, and, capping off Earth Week, a performance by the musical group Rhythmic Union.

In regard to the assistance which has been lent by the campus for the planned events, Fink says, "It takes a diverse group of people to make it happen. I've had financial support from the administration, the Students' Government, faculty members in the biology department and the Biology Club. This is a commuter campus which seems to lack a real connectedness, and I feel this is a good opportunity to seek some cohesion on campus for this very worthwhile cause."

Locally, other groups are gearing up for Earth Day as well. The Earth Day Steering Committee, hosted by the Stockbridge Audubon Society, IPFW's Students' Government and Biology Club, is chaired by Paul Mcalav. According to McAlev, "What our group is doing is attempting to coordinate all these events and put out a brochure on them. We also are going to include some of the publicity for the events: press releases, news conferences, public service announcements (and) arranging interviews."

The Fox Island Alliance, the County Parks, the City of Fort Wayne, the River Greenway Organization, CARES, the Issac Walton League and the Fort Wayne Astronomical Society are among the other groups that will be participating in Earth Day events.

Asked what he believed is the major environmental problem facing the world today, McAlev replies, "I think the main problem is ignorance or a lack of environmental awareness. I think that if people were aware of what the environmental consequences of all their actions, they would be fewer environmental problems."

Semester schedule proposals are made

By KELLI BEERY
Staff Writer

At the Feb. 12 meeting of the IPFW faculty senate, an amendment was proposed to alter the calendar schedule of the fall term of 1990.

The calendar subcommittee voted unanimously on a proposal to allow classes to begin on Thursday, Aug. 23, and end on Wednesday, Dec. 19. The senate then received the proposal without an amendment to be voted on next week.

If the semester dates are not changed, the semester will end two weekdays before Christmas, with one of those days a school holiday. This calendar will postpone the grading process, as instructors have 48 hours to turn in their grades at exam time.

The first proposal to change the calendar suggested the fall term begin Monday, Aug. 20, and end Friday, Dec. 14. This proposal was met with criticism.

Kenneth Keller, associate professor of education, argued that the change would inconvenience student teachers in the education program: when the grades would have been processed, the student teachers would not have completed their student teaching and therefore would not have received a grade, in turn, certification.

Other arguments included the burden on athletes from conflict with scheduled games. Because of a senate policy, athletic teams cannot compete during final exams, and the proposed semester change would put formerly-scheduled games into the week of final exams.

As a result of these arguments, the amendment which finally was accepted for vote was proposed as a substitution.

The new calendar proposed by the senate offers several advantages to students and faculty. Grades would be available Wednesday, Dec. 26, and mid-term evaluations could be done through Friday, Dec. 28. Finally, students would have two days of study the weekend during finals' week.

One disadvantage to the proposal is that there would be no break between the last day of classes and the first day of final exams.

The final semester schedule must be decided in two weeks. The faculty senate favored a motion to act on the proposed amendment next Monday at noon.

Another proposal placed before the senate last Monday was to end the necessity for students to obtain signatures for certain standard procedures. This proposal was voted on and passed.

Senators discuss issues

By JO ANNE STEINFORTH
Staff Writer

Several bills were passed at the student senate meeting last Monday evening. The seat allocated assistance to the Accounting Society, the Marketing Club and International Students' Organization for their seminar on Global Changes.

The senate will also assist Dr. Biology Club in preparation of Earth Week festivities to be held April 22 to April 28. The senate will ask the chancellor for academic affairs will match the senate's gift.

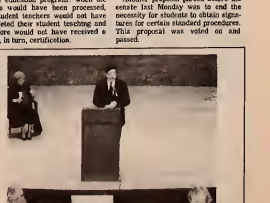
Also, IPFW has been invited to send two students to the 1990 President's Symposium in Washington, D.C. The senate agreed to pass the bill, as they were expenses last year at the symposium.

During the student senate meeting held two weeks ago, Marian Adair, dean of students, advised all committee members that they had been nominated for the campus Who's Who. In addition, Adair stated there would be an upcoming ethics and education luncheon on Saturday, Feb. 10. Nominees were submitted to Karen Chapman and will receive notice from Bloomington shortly.

Scott Myers, of the student affairs committee, reported on the possibility of placing an electronic bulletin board on the outside of the Classroom Medical Building. The bulletin board would notify students of campus events and other related issues.

The Accounting Society petitioned for assistance for its upcoming forum taking place on Monday, Feb. 19 at 7:30 p.m. in Classroom Medical Building Room 159. A panel of experts will discuss how the recent changes in Eastern Europe will reflect local business. The appropriations committee will meet next week to vote.

Dave Holle reported that the presidential officers are now getting paid. In addition, some topics were discussed at retreat to prepare suggestions of the existence of the senate such as bottom and information booths.



Bayh lectures Tuesday

Birch Bayh, U.S. senator for Indiana from 1962 to 1986, gave an open lecture titled "The Bill of Rights in the 1990s" on Tuesday at 8:00 p.m. in Neff Hall Room 101. He also fielded questions from the audience after his lecture. Seated at left is Joanne Liatti, chancellor, who introduced Bayh (Photo by Mark Daley).

IPFW Apathy
Students should do more and complain less

Everyone has a gripe and everyone seems especially to have complaints about IPFW.

In the Helmke Library lounge, in the Fort, in the halls, o listener hears mutterings about how this campus offers few activities to its students, how terrible it is the students have to park so far from the buildings, how crazy/dull/unreal/inept/eccentric the professors are, how difficult/easy/unrelative/slow/fast the courses are. The services are bad; the deans are hard, and the student newspaper is crummy. Everything is terrible.

If this is so, why do people bother to come here at all?

Could it be that to criticize is fashionable end easy? It is easier to gripe than to attend, join or use activities and organizations, clube and services. It is easier to drive home after the last class and forget the university—until the next day, and then it's time to complain again.

Of course, IPFW is a commuter campus, and students must drive back and forth to classes each day. Also, many students work either full or part time and find time for clubs a premium.

But what about the people who do belong to and work for the clubs, organizations and services? Are they exempt from driving to school every day? May they not have part or full-time jobs in addition to studies, as do those who don't join or help?

The difference in caring enough to take the time and make the effort to try to make IPFW a better place for everyone. It's not really so difficult, and it makes more sense than merely grumbling about things.

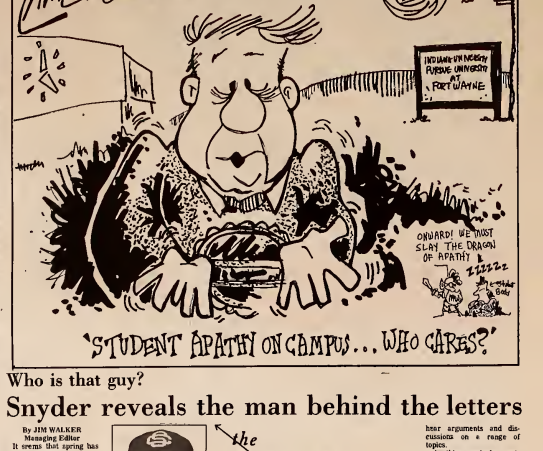
Being active in organizations enables students to contribute ideas, to improve situations on this campus. If each person chooses a pet peeve and joins the activity related to this, that person has a vote and voice in effecting change.

If a student is dissatisfied with the Communicator, for example, the student should apply to the newspaper for a position as a staff writer or editor. The newspaper can always use new insight and input from students who concerned about IPFW—and themselves—to devote a little time to help cover campus events, interview and/or edit. The experience is invaluable and will add to a resume.

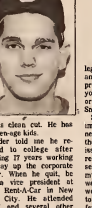
IPFW's clube are numerous and cover a wide range of interests—from math to culture, from anthropology to literature. These clubs dearly welcome new members and would be overjoyed to have to round up extra chairs for unexpected new members.

But, of course, this will not happen. Club members will not work well; activities will not be crowded; services will not be inundated with applications for positions.

Instead, students will drive home after the last class and forget about IPFW until tomorrow—and then it's time to gripe again.



Who is that guy?
Snyder reveals the man behind the letters



the Obtruse angle

By JIM WALKER
Managing Editor

It seems that spring has sprung. Green are returning in formation from the south. Robins perch on newly-budded tree limbs, chirping in the morning sun. But nobody notices that crop; we are all too busy wondering who the heck is Mark S. Snyder.

He's the guy who writes controversial and often off-the-wall letters to the editor. He called his Feb. 1 letter to The Communicator "the Declination of Sexual Independence." He compared cigarette smoking to eating junk food in an earlier letter. His latest attack has been on an IPFW forum concerning Marxism. Every letter he writes draws at least one letter in rebuttal from a student or faculty member.

So what's the deal with Mark S. Snyder? Being the curious guy I am, I hunted him down at the Helmke Library lounge. Snyder is known as the "Guru of the library lounge," and he's almost always there.

I had envisioned him as some youthful 60s throwback, complete with leather jacket, waist-length hair and tie-dyed concert shirt. But that's not the Mark S. Snyder I found. He's 40 years old, and his graying hair is clean cut. He has two teen-age kids.

Snyder told me he returned to college after spending 17 years working his way up the corporate ladder. When he quit, he was a vice president at Hertz Rent-A-Car in New York City. He attended IPFW and several other colleges before he started at Hertz. Two decades later he was back. IPFW had changed, and so had Mark S. Snyder.

Snyder saw IPFW as the place to attend both because it was in his home town, and because he likes it here. "The most positive thing about IPFW, being been to four or five other colleges, is the opportunity that undergraduate students have to be taught by full professors. In the other colleges I went to in the 60s and 70s, you didn't see a full professor or a Ph.D. until you were in an upper-level or graduate-level class," Snyder said.

Snyder does see room for improvement here. "There needs to be a way to involve the students much more in issues of social and political relevance. There is a mindset that this is just a commuter campus, and that if we were at Bloomington it would be different. We have to realize there is no difference. If I stand in front of the library and look around, I don't know that I'm in Fort Wayne and bordered by two highways."

Snyder has seen some drastic changes in the student mind-set on campus. "There is something that saddens me the most, when I think back to 1970. When you walked into the basement of Kettler then, they had tables set up by the bookstore entrance, at which they were signing up students for Young Democrats, Young Republicans, Students for a Democratic Society and other social and political issues. Today they are signing you up for Marriage Counselors, and that's scary and that's sad."

If I were going to describe the 60s, I'd describe it as a time of social relevance, at least in regard to people on campus. Today the campus has become the terrain for materialism, consumerism, objectivism. In the 60s, the question was, 'What's your sign?' Today, it's 'What's your major?'" Snyder said.

There is still a bit of the 60s here at IPFW. Snyder and some friends enjoy long hours in discussion of the library lounge. "Probably more studying, true studying, takes place in the library lounge than at any place on campus. It's not crowded people with their nose buried in books. There's a camaraderie over there with students helping one another. It's one place on campus that you can hear arguments and discussions on a range of topics.

Anything anybody wants to discuss is open. It gets interesting. It's not uncommon for professors to drop in and engage in the conversation. It reminds me of the 60s. It almost takes on the resemblance of an off-campus coffee house from the 60s," continued Snyder.

Snyder writes letters to The Communicator in the hope of stirring the apathetic IPFW student body. "I wanted to offer a viewpoint that was not from the mainstream. I wanted to find out if these kids have a clue, if they care at all about issues. I wanted the devil's advocate hoping to see some response from the letters, and there has been. I'm glad to see it. I purposely take strong positions to elicit some thought, some dialogue. There has been some."

Mark S. Snyder calls himself an anarchist a radical, but foremost, a libertarian. We all may not agree with his opinions. He may be observed as a little loopy. He may be more young students with his vivacity instead of so many department-store clones, the future of our generation would be brighter, indeed.

Student senate members distribute prophylactics

Kudos to the newly formed Students' Coalition for Reproductive Freedom and to the IPFW student senate for their constructive participation in National Condom Week.

Yesterday, students involved in the coalition and the senate handed out Planned Parenthood information packets and approximately 600 condoms. Through such actions, the students raised awareness about reproductive choices and responsibilities. And by disseminating information and handing out contraceptives, they may not only have helped to prevent a few un-planned pregnancies, but saved lives as well.

AIDS is a growing threat to people everywhere. It does not discriminate on the basis of race, age, sex or sexual orientation. We need to vigilently raise awareness about this horrible disease and mobilize resources to prevent more tragedies from occurring. The actions taken by the concerned students yesterday were a step in the right direction.

This is the first year for National Condom Week, which is observed to encourage people to practice safe sex. Activities related to this awareness are occurring on college campuses nationwide. We hope that National Condom Week helps to prevent the spread of AIDS. And we hope that our school administration will exhibit the same concern for human life as that shown by the students yesterday—by installing contraceptive dispensers at IPFW.

Letters to the Editor
Legacy Challenge myths dispelled by writer

To the Editor:

There have been some myths circulating recently about the Class Legacy Gift. These myths have not been passed along to me through hearsay, but have been told to me directly. It is not surprising to have opponents in the pursuit of one thing or another, and one should really not care. But if the opposition is operating on misinformation, that needs to be addressed and corrected.

"Fortunately, there is one bright spot in the opposition is holding. They believe that the idea to give IPFW a memorial is a great idea. So do I."

I have heard that the Class Legacy Gift was not a legitimate student project. What is meant by this is that the students have taken a back seat to the administration in this pursuit. This is absolutely not true. Since September of last year, a group of students have conceived, organized, planned and executed a course of action to make the idea a reality. The administration has been asked at various times for their opinions on how to do things, but they have never imposed their will upon the student committee.

I have also heard that the design was submitted by administration, and that it is judging was done by the administration. Once again, they are wrong. The competition was won by Jodi Boyden, a junior in the graphic arts department, and the judges were made up of professionals outside the IPFW campus (by the way, these are all regulations that were printed on the "Rules and Regulations" of the Class Legacy Challenge that was published last November and were available at the time).

And last, but least, I have heard talk about this being a noisy, unsaintly sculpture and a brightly-colored eyesore. Where did this come from? At best, someone overheard a conversation, which became distorted as it was repeated, and it eventually turned a prize-winning design, intended to enhance the campus environment, into an ugly distraction.

Fortunately, there is one bright light that the opposition is holding. They believe that the idea to give IPFW a memorial is a great idea. So do I! But I still have some questions.

Why didn't they submit more designs to the competition? Why didn't they offer to lend a hand in designing the competition and fund drive? The Communicator ran infographic every week for two months asking for volunteers for the committee. Where were they? I guess it has been and always will be easier to tear apart another's idea than to create your own.

It is true that everyone has a right to his own opinion, and that taste differ from person to person, and I encourage that. But when people begin to take sides based on those tastes, especially in the case of the Class Legacy Gift, it really stinks. If you don't like it—don't give it. But don't start passing around petitions, either.

Snyder opinion again questioned by writer

To the Editor:

We all owe Mark S. Snyder a debt of gratitude for elucidating the true character of the "original" pro-life (read "pro-sex, pro-freedom, pro-pleasure") movement (Communicator 2/1/90). It is "dancing and propagating, having visions...having the opportunity to be truly responsible," as the much is of dances around the candle flames. In other words, it is spontaneous, ecstatic, hedonistic and hedonism.

In this view, the really deadly thing about getting pregnant or contracting AIDS is that thinking about them tends to distract one from the very "point and essence of life...the active enjoyment of living." So don't think about them. In the pursuit of happiness there is little place for considerations of prophylaxis or preservation of "biological existence."

Does Mr. Snyder realize that this cavalier attitude toward simply "surviving" is curiously reminiscent of certain teachings of Jesus Christ, who said, "He who loves his life will lose it." and "If any one does not hate his own life, he cannot be my disciple."

You see, a sexual radical and a Christian have at least one important things in common: they are both enmeshed in the paradoxical concepts of love; they both refuse to worry about survival (or about life, in a sense, suicidal); and yet they both love life to the full. It was Jesus (not William Blake) who said, "I came that they may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly," and "The thief comes only to steal and kill and destroy."

I challenge the reader who is really interested in life, truth and freedom to read for himself what the Son of God said about them. Start with the Gospel of John in the New Testament. (It's in the library.) It can be read in one sitting. It has changed millions of lives. It can change yours.

Boyden expounds on project inspiration

By CHRISTINE MEEK
Staff Writer

Jodi Boyden, a graphic design major whose designs placed first and third in the Class Legacy Challenge, reached to the art department to "put a few finishing touches like extra highlighting and shading" on her designs before the 8 p.m. contest deadline.

The few minutes of extra time paid off, however, when one of Boyden's designs was chosen as a gift to commemorate the campus' 25th anniversary. Her winning design is a sculpture of 25 colorful metal cylinders surrounding a small slanted cylinder bearing an anniversary insignia with a sidewalk encircling it. Boyden said that the idea of using several colors in her design is the result of wanting to create something different for the campus.

She feels that IPFW "doesn't have any real color as it, it's all real plain." A triangular stone monument with a circular piece rising from it, which she says, "symbolizes both unity and variety," placed third in the Challenge. This design was entered just for luck, according to Boyden.

While working for the College Access Channel 8, doing everything from designing posters to the current two-color channel program flier, Kaveh Nikpour, director of Channel 8, mentioned the contest to Boyden and suggested that she enter. After completing the initial design, Boyden went back to Nikpour for some suggestions for its improvement. Boyden credits Nikpour with "providing the motivation that kept the project going." She also adds that, "Kaveh had a great impact on the final design."

Boyden, who has already received an Associates degree in commercial art, has no definite plans for the future, but is considering a career in advertising. She says she feels fortunate because, aside from her two winning designs, she recently created a four-color illustration for the summer German Fest.

Boyden won $300 in gift certificates to be used at stores of her choice. She also designed a lasting sculpture honoring IPFW.

The fifth performance in the Faculty Artist Series was given on Sunday, Feb. 4, in Neff Hall Room 101. The piano recital featured Mission Robertson, associate professor of music. The recital and reception were sponsored by Jones Engineering Products, Inc.

Review

Robertson has made several appearances with the Fort Wayne Philharmonic and the Indiana Chamber Orchestra. He has also performed recitals and chamber music throughout the Midwest.

At the Feb. 4 recital, Robertson's talent was demonstrated as he performed the Sonata in A flat minor, Opus 26, by Beethoven. Each movement was carefully interpreted with great precision. The musician's technical ability was quite evident in the Scherzo and Allegro movements, and his understanding of the piece was apparent, especially in the first and third movements.

For the Gershwin lovers, Robertson provided Preludes for Piano (1926) and a selection of songs from the Gershwin Song Book. Among the favorites were "The Man I Love," "Somebody Loves Me", and "I Got Rhythm." The audience was enthusiastic and perhaps even tempted to hum.

After finishing the Schumann's Arabesque, Opus 18, the melody lingered throughout the hall. Equal in style and skill, the musician was triumphant in articulating several emotionally-moving passages.

The recital was not complete until Debussy's Pour Le Piano and two works by Liszt, Concert Etude in D flat major (Un Sospiro) and Hungarian Rhapsody No. 11 in A minor, were performed.

The mesmerization during the Debussy piece was relaxing yet exciting as Robertson appeared to use all his talent in making the piece a great success.

Soon after the audience vigorously applauded Robertson, he performed Liszt's Concert Etude in D flat major (Un Sospiro). Not only was the piece masterfully interpreted, it was performed beautifully. Robertson's style captured the haunting-sweet melody yet released much sentimentality.

Robertson's final piece, Hungarian Rhapsody No. 11 in A minor, enabled the musician to display his understanding of the music of Liszt. His articulation throughout the piece was amazing right as he put all emotion into performance. In return for his enthusiasm during the piece, he received a rightfully-deserved ovation.

Listening to and watching the talented musician perform various types of musical pieces from 19th and 20th century musicians made a very enjoyable afternoon. Robertson is a very talented musician and artist who performs with much enthusiasm. His interpretations were wonderfully executed because of his obvious love of music.

The recital was recorded for future broadcast on WBNI FM, 89.1. The next performance of the Faculty Artist Series will be Sunday, Feb. 18, at 2:30 in Neff Hall Room 101. The recital will feature the Faculty Chamber Music Ensemble.

Send or take Problem Corner solutions by Thursday, Feb. 21, in Kettler Hall Room 283 or 285.

The department of mathematical sciences will publish a problem each week. The names of those who submit correct solutions will be published. Prizes will be awarded to the undergraduate solvers with the best record for the semester. Both quality and timeliness count.

A solution to Problem 2 is posted on a bulletin board in the department of mathematical sciences. It was solved by Carmen Kmety, Cathy Veers, Chuck Lockhart and Aaron Peretski.

Volleyball 2nd at Rutgers

By JASON HERRON
Sports Editor

FRED MALCOLM

The IPFW men's volleyball team picked up a second-place finish in the Rutgers University Golden Dome Volleyball Tournament over the weekend.

The men downed Penn State in five games to advance to the championship match before falling to host Rutgers in four games.

In the Penn State match, the Volleyboys trailed the Nittany Lions two games to none, 10-15 and 8-15. The 'Dons then staged a comeback and won the last three games 15-13, 15-10 and 15-10 to win the match and advance to the championship game against Rutgers.

Junior Fred Malcolm led the team in kills against Penn State with 27, and Tony Luhning had 20. Matt Lucas added 19 kills. Freshman Raul Fapoles led the team in digs with 11 and assists with 41.

Against Rutgers, however, the Volleydons didn't fare as well, losing 11-15, 7-15, 15-9 and 11-15 to give Rutgers the championship on their home court.

Again Malcolm led the team in kills with 17, while Juhnke, Lucas and Luhning added 15 kills each. Malcolm and Luhning had seven digs each, while Lucas had seven blocks and Fapoles had 56 assists.

Penn State downed Ohio State to claim third place, and the Buckeyes took fourth place.

With the win and loss, the Volleydons overall record stands at 7-6 as they enter play in the Midwest Intercollegiate Volleyball Association Friday night against Ohio State at 7:30 p.m. in the Athletic Center.

Men's basketball playing well

By JASON HERRON
Sports Editor

After hitting a slump in which they dropped six of nine games earlier in the season, the IPFW men's basketball team is once again on the winning track.

The Mastodons opened the season at 3-0-6, but then hit the skids, and at one point their record was 13-6. Even worse, their Great Lakes Valley Conference record dipped to 3-6.

Recently, however, the 'Dons have turned things around. They have won their last four GLVC outings, including wins last week over Lewis and Kentucky State. The two wins raised their season mark to 17-6 and put them over .500 in the GLVC at 7-6 and into fifth place in the conference.

At Lewis the 'Dons won easily by the score of 103-88. Senior Lloyd Sergent led the team in scoring with 23 points, while sophomore Sam Long added 17 points and a team-high eight rebounds.

At Kentucky State the 'Dons trailed by 13 points with four minutes left to play and came back to win 89-86 with an 18-4 stretch run. Sergent sealed the win with a free throw with one second remaining to play. Senior Lawrence Jordan led the team in scoring with 18 points, while freshman Doug Reinke added 14. Freshman Sean Gibson led the team with six rebounds, and Jordan also dished out 12 assists.

Jordan currently leads the GLVC in assists and steals. The senior is averaging 8.6 assists per game, 2.5 more than the second place player. He also holds a comfortable lead in steals, averaging 3.87 per game, more than 1.5 more than the second place player.

As a team the 'Dons also rank high in GLVC statistics. They are second in field goal percentage at 52 percent, second in scoring offense at 97.5 points per game and fourth in scoring margin, winning by an average of 8.5 points.

The 'Dons will look to continue their winning ways with two home GLVC contests this week. Bellarmine, one game ahead of IPFW in the GLVC, will visit tonight at 8 p.m., and Northern Kentucky, last in the GLVC, will be here at 6 p.m. Saturday.

In their previous meeting at Bellarmine, the 'Dons lost 89-98 in three overtimes. At Northern Kentucky the 'Dons won 89-86.
